UM STUDENT FROM BALLANTINE PUTS ACADEMICS TO WORK

MISSOULA -

Carolyn Sorgenfrei, a University of Montana senior from Ballantine, is putting her academics to work in a spring-semester internship offered through UM's Center for Work-Based Learning.

Sorgenfrei, whose major is anthropology, is a photo archivist at the World Museum of Mining in Butte. She helps to preserve the museum's collection of over 7,000 photos and conducts research for people who wish to use the photos in films and publications.

Sorgenfrei graduated from Huntley Project High School in 1997. Her parents are Rod and Jeannie Swedberg.

UM's Center for Work-Based Learning's internship program provides opportunities for undergraduate and graduate students to integrate academic theories
